Dear Sirs:

I have been following the debate about Microsoft and its behavior from the beginning. I believe that Microsoft should be split into two groups: an OS group and an Application Group. It is the only way to stop Microsoft from integrating its applications into its Operating Systems which gives it an unfair advantage. The proposed settlement of distributing software and computers to under-privileged schools will have the opposite effect from punishment and will actually help Microsoft break into the education market where other computer manufacturers, (namely Apple), still have a healthy share.
